

Human Resources: Employee Experience – The Future of Work

“Employee experience is the future of work”, according to Forbes writer Jeanne Meister. As technology is rapidly improving, companies are trying to improve their atmosphere and culture to keep up with the digital transformations and to attract new talent. Human resource leaders are taking steps in giving frequent employee surveys to their teams. HR leaders believe that acquiring your companies people analytics is a way to increase your companies efficiency and effectiveness. Culture based surveys can allow the company to understand how changes, big or small, are effecting the company and the best way to accommodate their employees. These frequent surveys lead to “seeing the world through the eyes of the employee, staying connected, and being aware of their major milestones”, according to Susan Peters, Senior VP of GE. Human Resource capabilities within a company are endless and with technology rapidly improving, employees have to be given a voice within a company and the right tools to achieve their best at work.

In 2017, our company acquired Scarlett Surveys International, a leader in employee engagement and customer satisfaction surveys. Scarlett offers customizable surveys. With the landscape of HR changing, we too are excited to keep up with these changes by providing real metrics that enable you to improve your business and provide a high return on survey investment.

As an HR leader, what changes is your company making to drive retention and employee engagement? What tools have you found most effective?
